Session title as it should appear in program materials:

And How Are The Children?

Description of content you will cover - as it should appear in program materials: Please be specific about what you will address – if you will include cases/work through examples - this helps registrants decide which sessions are most relevant for their learning needs.

Story telling will be utilized to demonstrate how advocacy, community engagement, and policy change is essential to increasing the health of our children. I will share stories from different cultures, from patients, providers, and parents to help us remain child-centered in our work. Throughout the presentation I will highlight how these stories help us to develop approaches to concepts that are integral to the framework for the 21st century school nursing practice.

Please write a few lines we can use to introduce you at the conference:

Tracey Smith is the mother of two daughters and a person who feels lucky to be married to her husband of 25 years. She received her bachelors, masters, and doctorate degree in nursing from Southern Illinois University School of Nursing in Edwardsville, IL. She has worked at Southern Illinois University School of Medicine for 21 years and currently serves as the Director of Population Health Integration for the 66 counties served by the School of Medicine. She currently serves on many boards including a local hospital and school board, has received over 5 million in grant funding and contracts to provide patient centered care to those who are struggling with the current health care system. The answer to the question "And how are the children" - Tracey says her two children are well but not all children are well and it is this that keeps her motivated to continue to fight to change the systems we live in.
